ACCIDENTAL SHOOTING MAY COST BOY'S LIFE

Hugh Hanley in Critical Condition at Hospital.

BULLET PIERCED LUNG

Severely Wounded by Target Rifle in Alter's Shooting Gallery Monday—Bullet Entered His Neck and Took Downward Course.

A distressing accident occurred on Monday afternoon when a target rifle in the hands of 14-years-old John Martin was discharged and the bullet lodged in the neck of Hugh Hanley, aged 17 years. The accident occurred at Alter's shooting gallery, in the McClain block, opposite the Bush House. Joseph Alter happened to be absent from the place at the time and for a few minutes the gravity of the situation was not appreciated. Dr. Rogers was finally summoned and he had young Hanley removed to the hospital. There it developed that the bullet after entering the neck was deflected and took a downward course, piercing the upper lobe of the left lung. His condition has since been slightly improved, but the physicians say it is too early to know whether he will recover. The bullet has not been removed.

Hanley is a son of William Hanley. Young Martin, who has been employed at the shooting gallery, is a son of Frank Martin. There is no thought other than that the shooting was purely accidental.

The accident happened about 5 o'clock in the afternoon. According to Mr. Alter young Martin had been engaged in cleaning the target rifles used at the gallery. Young Hanley was standing close by. Unknown to Martin a gun which he was handling contained a cartridge. The cloth used by him to wipe off the guns caught in the trigger and the rifle was discharged. Unfortunately the muzzle of the rifle was pointing toward Hanley and the bullet entered his neck. With blood gushing from his mouth he staggered into the street and collapsed on the sidewalk in front of the "Democratic Watchman" office. At first passers-by did not notice that he was wounded. Several persons casually glanced at him and passed on. Finally somebody observed the blood running out of his mouth and then a physician was summoned. Dr Rogers saw at once that Hanley was in a serious condition and had him taken to the hospital. There Dr. Locke examined the wound and determined the course of the bullet. Hanley bled profusely both before and after being removed to the hospital. When it was found that the bullet had pierced the lung it was decided not to probe further for the time being.

To Elect Committeman.

The new direct primary law renders it necessary for the election by Centre County Republicans of a new representative in the Republican State Committee. The committeeman from this county will be elected at the primary on Tuesday, September 16th, next. County Chairman Quigley was the county representative in the old State Committee, having been elected as such by the delegates from the county to the last Republican State convention. The new primary law provides that where members of the old State Committee were elected by their respective County Committees they hold on until their successors are elected at the spring primary in 1914. State committeemen elected under the old delegate system, however, are retired.

May Go to Williamsport.

Captain William H. Brown this week received an invitation to have Company L, of Bellefonte, participate in the parade to be held at Williamsport on Thursday, September 11th. Williamsport will celebrate with an "Old Home Week" September 8-13. Thursday, the 11th, will be Military and Governor's day. Governor Tener will be present.

Woman Committed Suicide.

In a fit of despondency Mrs. Winifred Carndoff, of Curwensville, drank laudanum with suicidal intent Monday night or Tuesday morning of last week, and despite every effort to save her life, death resulted on Wednesday following.

Celebrated 25th Anniversary.

Mr. and Mrs. Joseph H. Long, of Flemington, last Saturday celebrated their twenty-fifth wedding anniversary. Quite a large number of guests were in attendance.

To Sell Buffalo Bill Show.

Federal Judge Lewis at Denver, Colorado, has ordered the property of the Buffalo Bill Wild West and Pawnee Bill Far East show sold at public auction at that city on Thursday, August 21. This action defeats the plans of Gordon W. Lillie (Pawnee Bill) to have the property disposed of by bankruptcy proceedings at Trenton N. J.

Judge Lewis will name appraisers who will classify the property into lots or groups so as to attract a large class of buyers. Telegrams have been sent to twenty circus owners advising them of the sale.

By Judge Lewis's order the larger creditors will be protected and the employees will have their claims settled without further expense.

SUSTAINS AGREEMENTS OF LIVESTOCK BOARD

Owners of Infected Cattle Must Live up to Contracts with State.

RULING BY THE COURT

Handed Down in Montgomery County Decision Affects all Sections of the State Where Cattle are Killed to Check Tuberculosis.

A court decision of interest to farmers in Centre County, and in fact throughout the State, has been handed down in Montgomery County. The opinion upholds the legality of the agreement which is required by the State Livestock Sanitary Board from owners of cattle infected by tuberculosis. In view of the ruling by the court State Veterinarian Marshall has announced that the future policy of the board will be the same as in the past.

When more than 20 per cent of a herd of cattle are killed by the state for tuberculosis, indemnity is paid only if the owners agree to have the remainder of the herd tested within six months and to follow the suggestions of the livestock board to prevent reinfection. Davis and Campert, of Norristown, had a number of cattle killed from their herd of forty and received $221.30, afterward violating their agreement. They have been ordered to return the money with interest and to pay the costs.

Thus far Auditor General Powell has not indicated what he will do in regard to the recent appropriation of $20,000 for indemity for cattle infected with tuberculosis and killed last year.

Baileyville Picnic.

The twenty-first annual picnic of the citizens of Baileyville and vicinity will be held at Beaver Dam park, one-fourth mile north of Pennsylvania Furnace railroad station, and about one-fourth mile west of the old park, next Saturday, August 16.

The amusements will include two games of base ball. The game at 10.30 in the morning will be contested by two home teams; at 2 o'clock in the afternoon there will be a clash between the State College Athletics and the Pine Grove All-Stars. Races of various kinds will be started at 3.30 o'clock. The merry-go-round will be there for the amusement of those who like this style of wnirl and there will be other events of interest. Music will be furnished by the Baileyville cornet band.

Malicious Mischief Alleged.

A hearing before Squire Musser is scheduled for 10 o'clock tomorrow morning, both prosecutor and defendant hailing from Marsh Creek. Several days ago Jack Thorp had James Heaton arrested, alleging that the latter had forcibly entered the Thorpe barn and liberated some cattle. The cattle in question are owned by Heaton. Thorpe claimed that the cattle had broken into his corn field and destroyed considerable corn. He locked up the cattle pending payment by Heaton for all damage done in the corn field. Claiming that Heaton some time later opened the barn door and liberated the cattle, Thorpe had a warrant issued.

State Police Stopped Gambling.

State police several days ago stopped all games of chance run as a side issue to a carnival at Lewistown last week. A local lodge had the carnival under its auspices. Lewistown ministers after appealing in vain to local officers succeeded in having a squad of State police to appear on the scene. All gambling games were stopped and a show with a number of girls was closed. Five girls with the show were arrested.

State College Students Killed.

Arthur May and Walter Foy, both of Hazleton, and students at State College, were killed by electricity Wednesday afternoon of last week, while connecting up switches at the Harwood plant of the Lehigh Navigation Electric Co. No one saw the accident, but it is thought May came in contact with the 25,000 volt wire leading to Berwick.

To Hold Festival.

The Royal Neighbors of America, of Bellefonte, will hold a festival on Saturday evening, next, on the Y. M. C. A. lawn. An enjoyable time is assured to all who attend.

Penrose to Speak.

Senator Penrose is scheduled to deliver an address at the Grangers picnic at Centre Hall on Thursday, September 18th. It is possible that Governor Tener will also be present.

SLAYER OF LITTLE GIRL TO GET HEARING TODAY

Massavash to Plead Guilty to Involuntary Manslaughter.

MEANS LIGHT SENTENCE

Man Who Accidentally Shot and Killed 11-Years old Annie Duke at Cato to Appear Before Judge Orvis in Habeas Corpus Proceedings.

Habeas corpus proceedings will be held today before Judge Orvis in the case of John Massavash, who several weeks ago accidentally shot and killed 11-years old Annie Duke, of Clarence. The shooting, it will be recalled, occurred at Cato following a wedding celebration.

Just what sentence will evertually be meted out to Massavash cannot be foretold. It is expected that he will plead guilty today to involuntary manslaughter, and pending sentence he may be released on bail. The law provides the sentence in such cases, the maximum prison term being two years. In all likehood Massavash will receive a short prison term.

When Massavash was originally arrested he was lodged in jail but no information was made against him and after some days he was released. Subsequently information was made against him before Squire Musser and he was returned from his home at Clarence to the county jail here. His case will be brought before the court by means of habeas corpus proceedings. A number of witnesses will be heard and the action of the court will, of course, be guided by what develops at the hearing.

Rescued Drowning Girl.

Miss Elizabeth Johnson, of State College, was rescued from drowning at Rock on Tuesday of last week, and Harry W. Sauers, also of State College, is being warmly congratulated on having saved her life. Mr. and Mrs. Hammil Holmes, Mr. Harry W. Sauers family and Misses Grace Edmiston and Elizabeth Johnson comprised a camping party at Rock. On the day in question several of the party were in bathing. Miss Johnson missed her footing and slipped off an improvised diving board. To the surprise of her companions she did not come to the surface. Harry Sauers made a quick dive at the point where she went down and found her seated on the bottom of the stream, apparently unconscious. He brought her to the surface and with vigorous rubbing she was soon revived. If Andy Carnegie has any stray medals he might send one to Mr. Sauers.

Miss Louise Maitland Weds.

A wedding of interest to Bellefonte friends of the bride was that in Williamsport on Tuesday, the contracting parties being Miss Louise Maitland, of that city, and Walter E. Dayton, of Towanda. The ceremony was performed at high noon in Trinity Episcopal church, Rev. R. F. Gibson officiating.

Rube Bressler Advancing.

Rube Bressler, of Flemington, who has been pitching great ball for the Harrisburg Tri-State League, has been signed up by Connie Mack, manager of the Philadelphia Athletics In addition to pitching fine ball Bressler has developed into a star batter. Mack paid the Harrisburg club $2,000 for Bressler's release.

Preparing for County Fair.

The premium books for the Centre County fair are being distributed over the county. The managers of the fair are endeavoring to get the best horses on the track for this year's races.

Extension at Y. M. C. A.

The rear wall of the Y. M. C. A. building has been gradually sinking for some time past. It has been decided to remove the wall and build an extension to the gymnasium 25 x 40 feet.

Open Auto Bids Today.

Plans and specifications for the proposed plant of the Bellefonte Automobile Co. have been completed and bids asked for. Bids will be opened today at 10 o'clock.

Mr. Fleming Honored.

Wilson I. Fleming, of Bellefonte, has been appointed assistant chief of the State Bureau of Statistices. He has for many years been a clerk in the state department in charge of election papers.

Buys Tyrone Poperty.

Frank K. Mattern, of Warriors Mark, has purchased the Ralph H. Dean property on West Sixteenth Street, Tyrone.

CONTEST NEARING CLOSE

Bellefonte Clerks Hustling to Capture Free Trip to Atlantic City.

The popular clerks contest being conducted by the Bush House Cigar Store will close at midnight on the night of Saturday, Augut 30th. In the closing weeks of the contest the several participants are hustling harder than ever for votes. A heavy vote was cast last week and the voting has been steady during the present week. The big vote of the week will be cast on Saturday, on which day double coupons will be given with each 5c purchase. The total vote cast up to midnight last Saturday night follows:

Luther Fishburn,	14,533
Helen Robb,	13,735
John Eckel,	11,669
Inez Cronemiller,	3585
W. D. Shope,	1492
Mary Osmer,	1308
Harry Keeler,	278
E. E. Lane,	243
Thos. Shaughnessy, Jr.	111
Mary Connelly,	70
Julia Curtin,	63

No Certificate Required.

A wrong impression is abroad regarding the new marriage license law. It has been stated that it is not necessary for both applicants for a marriage license to go before a justice of the peace and make affidavit to the facts set forth in the application. This is an error.

If the persons who wish to marry live a long distance from the county seat that it is inconvenient for them to appear before the recorder they may go before any justice of the peace and answer the questions found in the new license blank. The new law requires that the applicants—both of them—must appear before either a justice or the register and recorder not before both of those officials.

Another error is that of thinking the applicants for license must have an affidavit to the facts, or a certificate of health from a physician. All that is necessary is that the questions contained in the marriage license blank be answered no certificate is required.

Relationship Tangle.

For a relation mix-up, a marriage that took place last week in Venango county takes the prize. Elizabeth Gertrude Jones, whose father had married the second time, wedded Lee McClimins, a brother of the girl's step-mother. This made the bride's father, who was already McClimins brother-in law, also his father-in-law. McClimins father, who was already father-in-law of the bride's father, became the father-in-law of the bride. The bridegroom, who was already an uncle of a half-sister of the bride, became her brother-in-law, and the girl's stepmother became her sister-in-law as a result of the marriage.

Hot Judgeship Fight.

Clearfield County is witnessing a bitter fight over the judgeship. A large number of aspirants are in the field. The number includes Judge A. O. Smith, who is seeking re-election. Ten years ago the friends of Judge Smith waged his campaign on the issue that ten years was enough for any man, this being made to apply to the then incumbent, Judge Gordon. Now Judge Smith's opponents are using the same campaign slogan in trying to prevent his securing a second term.

New Ticket Redemption Order.

With a view to making it more convenient for passengers to redeem unused railroad tickets, the Pennsylvania Railroad has established a rule which provides that, if a ticket wholly unused is presented by the original purchaser at the ticket office at which it was sold, it may be redeemed for the fare at which it was sold. Heretofore to redeem tickets it has been necessary to forward them to the office of the General Passenger Agent at Philadelphia, with the attendant delay.

County Grange Meeting.

The Centre County Pomona Grange will hold its third quarterly meeting in the hall of Victor Grange, at Oak Hall, on Thursday, August 21st, at 10 o'clock A. M. All members of the order are cordially invited to attend.

D. M. CAMPBELL, Secretary.

Festival at Coleville.

The Methodist congregation at Coleville will hold a festival at the chapel at Coleville on Saturday evening, August 16th. Ice cream, cake, fruit and candies will be on sale. Everybody invited.

Option on Thompson Farm.

The Pennsylvania State College has obtained an option on the old Moses Thompson farm at Centre Furnace.

COMPOSITOR WANTED.

A compositor is wanted at The Republican office. Good wages.

FEW PETITIONS FILED FOR COMING PRIMARIES

Little Activity Thus Far by Prospective Candidates.

LAST DAY IS AUGUST 26

Jury Commissioners Decker and Hazel are Seeking Re-nomination—Registration Officers Complying With Enrollment Law.

Although August 26th—just twelve days distant—is the last day for filing nomination petitions with the County Commissioners, comparatively few such papers had been placed on record up to date. Unless the next few days witness a marked difference in the activity displayed by prospective candidates the closing hours for filing petitions will be attended with a grand rush at the office of the County Commissioners.

The only county officers to be filled at the November election are two Jury Commissioners, but there are a large number of petitions for Councilmen, Tax Collectors, Justices of the Peace and election officers still to be filed from the various townships over the county. Jury Commissioners John Decker and Adam Hazel have taken out petitions for renomination but thus far have not filed them. Such petitions require 100 signers. Both Jury Commissioners may not represent any one party. It is said that there may be another Republican aspirant for Jury Commissioner from Bald Eagle valley and that also there will be an additional Democratic candidate from Nittany valley. These prospective candidates have not taken out petitions as yet.

The extra registration to record the party preference of voters, as required by the new party enrollment law, reveals as far as it has gone that quite a number in Bellefonte borough have declared themselves as Washington Party men. The registration to date also shows a good percentage of Republicans and also Democrats. In a general way, some who voted the Washington Party ticket last November have declared themselves as regular Republicans.

Married at Howard.

On the evening of Aug. 12th, the home of Mr. and Mrs. Jefferson McCallion at Howard was made the scene of a happy event when their daughter Annie was given in marriage to Mr. Alexander B. Cresswell, of Lock Haven. A very pleasant company of invited friends had gathered to share in the festivities of the hour and to offer their congratulations to the happy couple. The ceremony pronouncing them man and wife was performed by the pastor Rev. Mr. Snyder. Immediately preceding the ceremony was a beautiful wedding march played by Mrs. Kirkpatrick, of Howard. One of the pleasant features connected with the event was the very appetizing menu so royally and bountifully served by the parents of the bride. The young calithumpians, who are invariably in evidence upon such an occasion, also had a share as usual in the generosity of the groom. All unite in wishing the newly made pair a long and blessed wedded life.

Osceola Girl Weds.

At the Presbyterian church in Osceola a pretty wedding was solemnized last Friday morning at 8 o'clock, when Miss Alice Henry, of that place, became the bride of Paul Matley. The attendants were Mr. and Mrs. Fred Henry, of Lewistown, and only the immediate friends of the contracting parties were in attendance at the ceremony. The bride's pastor, Rev. S. T. Lewis, used the pretty ring service that united them in holy wedlock, and after congratulations had been showered upon the newly weds, they proceeded to the home of the bride's father, Mr. Philip Henry, where a pleasing wedding breakfast was served. Mr. and Mrs. Matley left on the morning train for a honeymoon trip through western states, and upon their return, will reside at Osceola. They will have the best wishes of a large circle of friends.

Governor Impeached.

The New York Legislature yesterday impeached Governor Sulzer. The vote for impeachment was 79 to 45. The Governor wept when informed of the verdict. The date for the trial will be fixed today.

Tressler Family Reunion.

The fifth annual reunion of the well known Tressler families will be held at the Fair Grounds, nearby Bellefonte, on Saturday, August 23d. All friends of the families are cordially invited.

CARING FOR CHILDREN

Timely Bulletin Calling Attention to Infant Mortality.

"Parental Care" is the title of a monograph just issued by the Children's Bureau of the Department of Labor. It is the first of a series of bulletins to be issued by the bureau on the care of children. The reasons for its publication are set forth by Miss Julia C. Lathrop, chief of the bureau, in her letter transmitting the monograph to Secretary Wilson. The letter says:

A preliminary survey of the field prescribed by law for the bureau's investigations showed at once the urgency of the question of infant mortality. The United States Census Bureau estimates that 300,000 babies less than 1 year old died last year in this country, and it is authoritatively stated that at least half these deaths were needless. Accordingly the bureau's first field inquiry is upon the subject of infant mortality. The studies preliminary thereto have induced us to begin our series on the care of children with this monograph on Parental Care, for consideration of which the following statement is significant.

The lastest reports of the Bureau of the Census on mortality statistics show that slightly more than 42 per cent of the infants dying under 1 year of age in the registration area in 1911 did not live to complete the first month of life, and that of this 42 per cent almost seven-tenths died as a result of conditions existing before they were born or of injury and accident at birth. Of those that lived less than one week about 83 per cent died of such causes, and of the number that lived less than one day 94 per cent died of these causes.

Thus the Children's Bureau was drawn inevitably to begin its contemplated series of monographs on the care of children by a statement regarding parental care for mother and child.

The preparation of such a statement has been requested by the National Congress of Mothers and by members of other representative bodies of women. It has been written by Mrs. Max West, of the staff of the bureau, from the standpoint of a woman who has university training, experience in Government research, and who is herself the mother of a family of young children. It has been prepared after careful study of the literature of the subject. It has been read and criticized by a large number of well-known physicians and nurses, and by many mothers. To mention by name all those to whom the bureau is indebted for valuable aid in its preparation would be impossible, but especial appreciation may be expressed of the generous assistance of Dr. J. Morris Slemons, professor of obstetrics and gynecology in the University of California.

This monograph is addressed to the average mother of this country. There is no purpose to invade the field of the medical or nursing professions, but rather to furnish such statements regarding hygiene and normal living as every mother has a right to possess in the interest of herself and her children. A standard of life for the family high enough to permit a woman to conserve her strength for her family, if she knows the facts essential for her guidance, is necessarily taken for granted. The attempt is made here to present some of the most important of these facts.

Forest Fire Posters.

The Department of Forestry at Harrisburg has just issued a forrest fire poster 14x22 inches in size, to be distributed generally over the forested regions of curses which befall us as the result of forest fires.

Forest fires, in most cases, result from the carelessness or indifference of some one. A burning match, a cigar or cigarette stub, or pipe ashes may be heedlessly dropped along the edge of a road or path through the forest; a small fire at camp or on a game runway is built and not thoroughly extinguished; these little things may be the cause of untold loss in many ways to innocent people.

Sometimes people see forest fires start, and do nothing to extinguish them when they are small. They do not realize that the greater the fire the greater their own individual loss. The unfortunate condition is that the greatest evils resulting from forest fires are not direct. Diminished streams and impure water may not be noticed for several years. The gradual increase in the price of wood may not be attributed to the local fire. The money that might have been brought to a community because of its beauty is not missed because it was never expected. The failure of farm or fruit crops is blamed upon "the weather" or "the bugs", when unquestionably the real cause was changed forest conditions in the neighborhood. The poverty of a region is blamed upon "hard times", "the Administration", and other indefinite things. Forest fires have made tree growth impossible, hence lumbering and other industries dependent upon the forest are impossible. The soil is too steep and too poor to farm and is constantly getting poorer or thinner. There is nothing to do but move out or starve.

Fires may increase the berry crop or the pasturage for a few years but the final result is far less than a crop of forest trees would yied.

Upon application stating number desired, copies of the poster described above will be sent to any one promising to place them in prominent places.

MUST ENROLL VOTERS

Judge Reed Holds that County Commissioners Must Enforce New Law.

Unless the Flynn enrollment act, which provides that every voter in the state outside of the cities in which personal registration is required, must declare his party preference to the assessor in order to participate in the primaries, is complied with, a large number of voters will be deprived of the right to cast their ballots at the primary election next month. This decision was made at Clearfield last Thursday when Judge J. W. Reed of Jefferson county, presiding in a test case ruled that it is no hardship to comply with the provisions of the act and issued an order directing the county commissioners to proceed at once to carry out the provisions of the law.

Judge Reed heard the arguments in the mandamus suit brought by John M. Hastings, one of the assessors of the borough of Clearfield, praying that the county commissioners be compelled to prepare suitable books or blanks for the enrollment of voters for the primary election. County Solicitor Liveright, arguing for the commissioners, took the stand that the new enrollment act does not require enrollment of voters this year that and also the act is unconstitutional. Mr. Liveright declared that the commissioners should not be ordered to issue the papers necessary to enrollment of voters in the several districts of the county.

In summing up the case Judge Reed declared that the former act of the Legislature required citizens of the first, second and third classes to be registered personally, but that the act did not require that the party affiliation be returned the assessors. Legislatures, Judge Reed ruled, had the right to pass a law requiring assessors to attach the party affiliation to the name of the voter.

Judge Reed said that failure to enroll would deprive a voter of the right to vote at the coming primaries for party candidates. The assessors have 45 days after the approval of the act in which to enroll voters, Judge Reed said, and this is neither impossible nor an unnecessary burden. He declared that there can be no legal excuse for neglecting to enroll voters according to their party preference. If the voters are not enrolled, he continued, they will be permitted to vote only for non-partisan candidates in the primary, which as far as Clearfield county is concerned, will be the candidates for judge.

The rule to the county commissioners was made absolute and a writ of peremptory mandamus was directed to issue as prayed for.

The Crop Outlook.

Bradstreet's Report says: A record-breaking crop of winter wheat, an average spring-wheat crop, and a total wheat crop of 750,000,000 to 775,000,000 bushels, is now generally conceded. Prices, however, hold steady, being affected by the apparent shortages, compared with last year's enormous yields, of animal feeding stuffs, such as corn, oats and hay. It is felt that with liberal, in fact record supplies of old corn and oats carried over, the money return to the farmers this year will be not far short of that of 1912.

Absence of rain has impaired corn in the southwest, and the area of damage has increased. In Oklahoma, Kansas, southern Nebraska and a large part of Missouri, the need of rain is acute, and much damage has undoubtedly been done. Rain is also needed in parts of Kentucky, Illinois, Indiana and Ohio. In fact, except in the northern states of the corn belt, rain is imperative if great damage and a material shortening of the yield is to be avoided. In the northwest corn has become an important crop, and thers the yields will, from present indications, be good.

Returns from oats threshings point to the crop as a whole being a light one, and the same is true of hay, which is a very irregular crop.

Southwestern pastures are in poor shape and there is a rush of half-fed cattle to central markets. On the other hand, there is a reverse movement of corn from large markets to the interior, and in parts of Kansas corn is bringing 3 to 5 cents a bushel more than wheat. Railroad traffic west of the Missouri has fallen off because of impaired crop prospects.

Dry weather has unfavorably affected the burley tobacco crop in Kentucky and the cigar leaf crop in eastern Pennsylvania, while early frost hurt the Wisconsin crop.

Found Snake in Stone.

The State College Times publishes the following: Joseph Reeder, who lives on Buckhorn mountain, is the owner of a very valuable curio which he secured while helping build on the top of the hill. Men were blasting rock out of the hillside and the pieces were rolled to the edge of the gorge and shoved over.

Reeder, while helping move one large piece, noticed a depression in it. He took his pick and burst open the rock, and to his surprise found within a yellow rattler as perfect as if alive, coiled and ready to spring. It had shed its skin, which lay nearby. The reptile lay as neatly in the broken stone as if it had just crawled in there instead of years and years ago.

MIKE REILEY'S FUNERAL

Showing That a Mistake May Breed Mistakes

By OSCAR COX

The incident of this story was a recent occurrence. This is mentioned beforehand because there are carping critics who would say after reading it that the plan was farfetched; that such happenings are only to be found in stories and there is nothing probable in it.

Mike Reiley, a young mason, started out to work on a bright morning, light hearted, for by the end of the week, when paid off, he would have the $500 that he had resolved to save before marrying Nora O'Toole, the girl he loved and who loved him better than all the world. The banns had been published, and everything was being made ready for the wedding, which was to occur in just ten days from that date.

Mike said "So long" to his mother, who was a widow, and to his sister, Kathleen, who worked in a paper mill, and then walked briskly along till he came to the house where Nora lived and where he expected to see her sitting in the second story window sewing on her wedding outfit, for Nora knew the time that Mike went to work and was always there to give and receive a smile, and sometimes they had a brief chat together.

This morning Nora threw up the sash, and Mike stopped, and Nora asked him if he had attended to this and to that in preparation for the wedding or the fixing up of the nest in which they were to live, a four room house near Mike's present home. He had satisfied her that he had done the painting needed, and replaced the broken glass in the windows, and mended the roof, and they both agreed that there was nothing more to be done on the premises except what could be done after they moved in. Mike kissed his hand to her. She threw him a kiss in return, and Mike went on his way, while Nora drew down the sash and resumed her sewing.

She was very happy considering that she was to be married so soon to the man she loved and plied her needle briskly. It seemed to go through the fabric of itself.

But suddenly a presentiment came over her that something was about to happen. In her mind's eye she saw a coffin with Mike in it and a lot of mourners sitting about as at a funeral.

Then it seemed to her that Mike sat up in his coffin and said: "What are you sittin' around that way for when you've come to a weddin'? Get up and shake a leg." But Nora drove it out of her head.

About 9 o'clock that night Mike's sister, Kathleen, appeared at Nora's home and asked if she had seen anything of Mike, for he had not come home. Nora was a bit troubled, for Mike, especially since he had begun his preparations to be married, had been very regular in his homecoming after knocking off work at 5 in the afternoon. She told Kathleen that she had not seen him since he went by in the morning, when he was looking very well and very cheerful. She asked Kathleen to tell him when he returned to come and let her know of his arrival, for she would not go to bed until she had news of him.

Mike did not come home that night, and in the morning her mother, his sister and his sweetheart were all very much troubled about his absence. They hoped that the postman would bring a note from him stating that he had been called upon to do some work which would take him too far from home to warrant his coming in the evening and going out again the next morning. But the postman passed, whistling at the door of every other house on his way except that of the Relleys, not leaving them a single letter.

The day ended without any word from Mike. They would have sent to where he worked to inquire about him, but Mike had never taken pains to keep them informed as to the places where he was employed, since he was frequently changing, sometimes working on two or three different jobs in the same day.

A week passed, and Mike did not turn up. His mother was broken down with worry. Nora ceased her preparations for the wedding. Kathleen alone, who was obliged to go to work every day and whose mind was therefore employed, stood up under the trouble. All three of them scanned what newspapers they could get hold of to see if a body had been found anywhere that might be Mike's.

One morning just before Kathleen went to the factory she saw her mother, who was looking in a newspaper for news of Mike, fall in a faint. Kathleen ran to her, and her first words after regaining consciousness were:

"My boy is dead!"

"Where is it, mother?" asked the horror stricken girl. "Show me!"

Mrs. Reiley put her finger on the item, and Kathleen read that the day before a man had staggered into St. Luke's hospital and had fallen unconscious. He had revived just long enough to say "My name's O'Reiley."

"It isn't Mike at all, mother," said Kathleen. "There's no 'O' to our name."

"Yes, it is," replied the poor woman. "The newspapers never get names right, and like enough the hospital people made the mistake themselves."

"Now, don't you worry, mother, dear. I'll go to the hospital—I'll do no work today—and see if it's Mike. But I'm sure it isn't."

So Kathleen, instead of going to the factory, started for the hospital and on reaching it asked to see the body of the man who had died there the day before. She was taken to where the body lay, and the moment she looked at it the tears started to her eyes, and she turned them away at once, so ghastly was the sight.

"It's my brother, Mike Reiley," she moaned.

She went away, stopping at Nora's to break the sad news to her. Nora was broken hearted, but bore her affliction with resignation. She went with Kathleen to Mrs. Reiley and told her that the body in the hospital was Mike's.

After awhile when they had become quieted they took steps to have the body brought to the house for the funeral. They called in friends, who took the burden upon themselves of making all the preparations. An undertaker was instructed to bring the body, and all other details were attended to.

The same evening the body arrived, already in its coffin.

A number of friends looked at Mike, each making some remark.

"He looks very natural," said one. "He must have died a peaceful death."

"How changed!" said another. "I'd scarcely know him."

And so the comments went on. Mrs. Reiley gazed down upon the corpse, her face blinded with tears. Nora would not look at it, saying that she preferred to remember the happy countenance of her lover as she saw it when he looked up at her while she was sitting at her window the last day he ever went to work.

When the day of the funeral came round the mother, the sister and the betrothed were given seats near the coffin, while the friends of the family took chairs behind them. There they awaited the opening of the funeral ceremony.

We left Mike on his way to his work. He was engaged in laying brick all day, and just before knocking off the boss drove up in a buggy and said to him:

"Mike, I've got a call for a chimney out in the country. The carpenter work is all done, and they can't do any more till the chimney is put in. I've agreed to send a man out tonight to go to work the first thing in the morning. I want you to go."

Mike demurred, but the boss offered him double pay, and he consented. A train was leaving in half an hour, which was barely enough time for him to catch it. He arrived at his destination at 11 o'clock at night and found a team waiting for him that carried him fifteen miles into the country, where there was no other house than the one being built within a considerable distance.

Mike worked several days on the chimney. He thought he should try to get word to his family as to the reason for his absence, but he was too busy to think much about it. He had once or twice remained on a job for several days without going home or sending word and did not expect to be longer on this one. But before he finished it he was called upon to put in the foundation walls for a house ready to be built a few miles away and was offered double pay if he would do it. He thought what a beautiful bridal gift he could buy for Nora with the extra money he was earning. He would take the job and if Nora complained of his being away so long just before the wedding he would console her with the gift.

When Mike finished his work and went home, as he approached the house where his mother lived he saw a hearse and carriages standing before the door. Terrified, he went in, eager to know who was dead. There sat his mother and sister and bride to be in a row before a coffin. His mother gave him one look and fainted. Nora drew back from him. Those occupying the rear seats tumbled over each other to get through the narrow door.

Kathleen alone seemed to take in the situation.

"Mike," she cried, "ye're not dead after all!"

"Dead? Why should I be dead?"

"I made a mistake. Mebbe I didn't look close enough."

"What's the matter with you all?" asked Mike.

By this time Nora had recovered her wits and flew to her lover's arms, burying her face on his breast and crying:

"Oh, Mike, sure it's a miracle! We thought you were in your coffin."

"In my coffin? Do I look like that?"

This led to a comparison, and it was agreed that the dead man, though not unlike Mike, under other circumstances would not have been mistaken for him.

"Get it out at once!" cried Mike.

In a twinkling all was changed. The faces put off the lugubrious appearance of mourning and put on the happy expression of wedding guests, for it was decided to hurry up the bridal preparations and turn the funeral into a marriage. That very evening the pair were united and went to live in the house they had prepared for their reception.

My story shows, among other things the power of the imagination. Kathleen's fear that she would find Mike's dead body in a coffin impressed on her mind that she saw him. This started a chain of imaginary incidents that led to a union of errors. After all, was there anything especially remarkable that, Mike being supposed dead, another person with a similar name should have been mistaken for him?

Java's Valley of Death.

The Valley of Death is on the island of Java. It is the most remarkable natural example of an atmosphere loaded with carbonic acid gas in existence. It has never been fully explored because of the danger of remaining more than a few minutes in its poisonous atmosphere. Approached through an opening between the hills, it is seen to be an oval shaped valley about half a mile across. It is about thirty-five feet deep. The bottom is hard and sandy, without vegetation and strewn with large stones. The surface is covered with the bones of animals, birds and human beings. Explorers seldom venture beyond the borders, though the deadly air does not immediately affect human beings. This is because the carbonic acid gas, being heavier than the atmosphere, settles to the bottom of the valley. Dogs and fowls thrown into it fall senseless instantly and die in a few minutes. No craters or fissures are visible on the floor of this valley, and it is thought that the openings are near the base of the hills. —Exchange.

A Floral Flirt.

The hollyhock is the worst flirt out. One never knows what to expect of it, except that it will always jauntily throw up its banner spikes of bloom and look brightly and smilingly at you. It is a stately coquette. It is pretty and willful. It won't grow in the place to which you carefully transplant it and positively refuses to allow its seeds to germinate in the spot of your choice, but wantonly throws them about in the most undesirable places and flourishes its coarse green leaves from the most impossible locations. Depend upon it? Not much! After you have carefully purchased or saved the seeds from the most double of blossoms and sowed them in fear and trembling, watched and protected them for a year, they will calmly open their flowers and stand there unblushingly and look you in the eyes, frowned with single petaled bloom. Of all the beautiful, coquettish, tantalizing flowers the double hollyhock is queen. —Suburban Life.

Their Lines Are Ended.

When one considers how many families there are which trace their ancestry in a direct line for many generations it is rather a surprising fact that there is not a single living descendant in the male line of some of the greatest men the world has ever produced. The following is a list of some of the illustrious men whose line never will be represented on the earth again as long as the world stands:

Chaucer, Shakespeare, Spencer, Milton, Cowley, Butler, Dryden, Pope, Cowper, Goldsmith, Byron, Moore, Sir Philip Sidney, Sir Walter Raleigh, Drake, Cromwell, Hampden, Monk, Peterborough, Nelson, Bolingbroke, Walpole, Chatham, Pitt, Fox, Burke, Washington, Canning, Bacon, Locke, Newton, Davy, Hume, Gibbon, Macaulay, Hogarth, Sir Joshua Reynolds, Sir Thomas Lawrence, David Garrick, John Kemble and Edmund Kean.

A Distinction.

Whibbles turned wrathfully on his yokel guide as his car sank up to the hubs in the mired road.

"What in thunder did you mean when I pointed this road out to you on the map and asked you if it was a good road and you said it was?"

"Why," said Silas, "you ast me if it was a good road on the map, and it was. Ye never ast me what kind of a road she was off the map. I could ha' told ye then it was the wust in the hull dinged county."—Harper's.

MARIA'S MONEY

She Drew Too Much on Her Imagination

By CLARISSA MACKIE

Maria Bevis dusted the glass show case in her little store, piled the bolts of percale and gingham neatly on the shelves, hung some imitation lace collars in the window and unlocked the door for the day's business.

Behind the store, which was the front parlor of her house, were the rooms where Maria lived.

As she sat at the window waiting for customers she saw a girlish form hurry past and enter the grocery store. Maria Bevis smiled sourly.

"Shiftless," she muttered, snatching irritably at the red yarn of her ball. "If that ain't just like Amy Lane. Probably just got out of bed and gone to the store for something for breakfast! I never could believe Cousin Sam's daughter could be so different from me! Bevises have always been thrifty and hardworking. Somehow Amy Bevis was different; then she went and married Howard Lane, and everybody knows it's starvation business running a country newspaper. But"—

The door swung inward with jangling bell, and a little, black eyed, white haired woman hopped in like a sparrow and perched on a chair.

"Well, Maria, how goes it!" twittered Ida Ramsell girlishly.

"I'm all right, Ida," returned Maria dryly. "Going out to sew today?"

"Yes—up to Mrs. Bremer's. I'll want two yards of slate colored silesia and two spools of black thread No. 60, I guess. Just saw Amy," remarked Ida.

"So did I."

"Amy looks sick, Maria."

"Probably she eats too much pastry. I hear she lives out of the bakery," sniffed Maria, squinting nearsightedly into a bag of thread.

"They are having a hard time to get along," murmured Ida kindly.

"Humph! Howard better go to work and do something that will bring in real money. I never dreamed when I lent that money to Amy's father that he would die without a penny. When I spoke to her about it she and Howard up and promised to pay every cent, with interest."

"I heard they said they would pay compound interest."

Maria flushed. "You do hear a lot of trashy talk, Ida! Howard did say that, but it's all talk. They've never made but the one payment on the interest. I never expect to get the rest."

"I expect it's a good deal for you to lose," suggested Ida inquisitively.

"That's a personal matter," returned Maria stiffly. "It's enough that I lent it to Cousin Sammy, and he gave me the note for it payable on demand. Amy and Howard have promised to pay it. But, land, I've given it up!"

"Folks say you don't speak to Amy and Howard now," ventured Ida Ramsell as she arose to go.

"For once folks are right. I told 'em I didn't hold to keeping acquaintance with cheats."

"Maria!" For once Ida's sharp voice was warmly sympathetic for young Howard Lane and his wife, Amy. Swiftly she changed the topic. "Mr. Busby told me to tell you that you was appointed one of the delegates to the convention at Ripple River. There'll be twenty-five churches represented. Mrs. Bremer's another. I suppose you'll go?"

"Go nowhere!" cried Maria bitterly. "I can't afford to, Ida. If Amy would pay me that money I could go."

"Well, I'm sorry. Goodby," said Ida hurriedly, and the door jangled after her. "My," she breathed as she skipped down the street, "Maria must have lent them a lot of money! When I think of all the things she's wanted to do and couldn't because of the money tied up in that family loan I feel's if she was a martyr."

Ida Ramsell repeated that remark the next afternoon at the sewing society, and a buzz of laughter went around the group of busy women.

"It must be thousands of dollars," observed Mrs. Bremer quietly, "although I never could understand how Maria Bevis could get hold of very much to lend. I remember, when I went into black for Mr. Bremer, I offered to sell her my new garnet silk, but Maria said she couldn't afford it just then; she'd lent every penny to Sammy's folks and they hadn't paid her back."

"Too bad of her to talk so much about it," said the minister's wife. "Family affairs are best kept in the family."

"That's what I'm always telling Maria," chirruped Ida Ramsell, sewing jerkily. "But she will gabble about it. Does seem's if her milk of human kindness was turned to vinegar and she just rejoiced in gettings slaps at Howard and Amy."

"I wonder how the baby is," murmured Mrs. Busby, the minister's wife.

"Better, so Amy said when I ran in there yesterday. Seems they had trouble with the milk from Long's. Howard wants to buy a cow, but I guess he doesn't dare to until they pay Maria."

That same night Amy and Howard Lane sat in their garden and talked of the future and played with Joyce, who seemed much better. From a tent on the green came sounds of laughter and threads of music, where a fair was in full swing.

Howard's arm was around Amy's waist. "Dear, if you hadn't married me you might have been over there enjoying yourself," he said, a little bitterly. "Now you are ashamed to go because you haven't got decent shoes to wear and because if you spent a penny Cousin Maria would frown and call us"—

"Cheats," finished Amy, with a little laugh. "Never mind, Howard. I've been to lots of fairs, and I've got you and baby, and that's enough for any girl. Only I do wish we could pay Cousin Maria's note."

They started to go into the house when a man entered the front gate and came briskly toward them. "Mr. and Mrs. Howard Lane?" he asked abruptly.

"Yes," said Howard.

"I'm Tobias Bevis—Maria's brother. Guess you've heard of me from your father, Amy, ain't it? You was a little girl when I went away. Your father, my Cousin Sammy, mortgaged his house for $1,000 to send me to California to get back my health. Well, I got it back and went to Australia, and I've been making money. I've brought back Cousin Sammy's money with compound interest. It's here in this packet. I'm sorry I couldn't give it to him direct. He was one of the best men in the world." The man's voice trembled as he finished speaking.

Without questioning why this long delayed loan was only now being repaid, Howard and Amy ushered Tobias Bevis into the house and listened to his story.

"I came here first. Maria wasn't home, and I went to the minister, Mr. Busby, and he gave me the particulars of Cousin Sammy's death. I'm sorry, Amy, that your father lost his home on account of me, but I'll make it up, if I can, to this little girl of yours. Did you say her name was Joyce?"

He played with the baby while Amy and Howard counted the money with trembling fingers and unbelieving eyes. Twenty-two hundred dollars! What wealth! Perhaps there would be enough left after Cousin Maria's awful debt was paid to give them a fair start in the world. Paying the interest had always kept them back.

"We must go tonight," whispered Amy, and Howard nodded assent.

Tobias promised to care for the baby until their return, and the happy pair hastened to Maria's house, where they found that spinster in a state of perturbation over the discovery of a man's leather suit case on her front piazza.

"What in time has happened?" she asked tartly as she ushered them into her sitting room.

"We've come to pay the note," said Amy proudly. "Will you please bring it at once, Cousin Maria? We must get it off our minds."

"With compound interest," added Howard.

Maria looked at them blankly. She had never expected the note to be paid, and she had not looked at it for years.

Slowly she walked to the china closet and took down a large blue china teapot. She thrust her hand in the top and drew out a bundle of yellowed papers.

Her spectacled eyes selected one and brought it to the table and laid it on the red cover. "There it is," she said skeptically. "Do you want to pay the whole of it?"

"I hope it isn't over $2,000," whispered Amy prayerfully as she turned over the note.

She stared uncomprehendingly at it and gave it to her husband. "What does it say?" she whispered tensely.

Howard read and his face flushed.

"Cousin Maria, do you mean to say that this note is only for $25—that that is all Father Bevis borrowed from you?" he demanded hotly.

Maria nodded dazedly. "I guess that's right," she said sheepishly. "Somehow I got to thinking how many things I could do with that money. It got to seem like a whole lot. I—I"—She paused helplessly, while Howard counted out $30 and pushed it across the table. Then he caught up the note and set a lighted match to it. When it crumbled to ashes he looked across the blacked fragments on the red cloth into Maria's scared eyes.

"Maria Bevis," he said gravely, "you've spoiled the three years of our married life, all for that paltry little sum. It is paid in full. How are you going to pay us back for the agony you have caused us? You have made us the laughingstock of the village and"—

"Don't Howard," said Amy softly. "Please don't. She is sorry."

"What would Rippledale say if it knew how much we really owed you?" Howard added remorselessly.

Maria's head dropped into her hands. "Tell 'em," she sniffed miserably. "I don't blame you one mite!"

There was silence. Then Howard spoke abruptly. "We won't tell a word, Maria. People may think what they please about the amount, but it is your place to inform every one that the note is paid, the debt is canceled. Will you do it?"

"Yes," cried Maria fervently. "I'll tell 'em tomorrow at the missionary meeting, and I don't suppose you'll ever have much to do with me again."

"Nonsense," said Amy brightly. "I'm coming over tomorrow morning with baby to buy something for new little dresses and we will have a cozy chat."

But Maria Bevis punished herself in her own way. When her brother Tobias came in and surprised her by his sudden arrival she told him the whole story, and any one who knew Maria Bevis and realized how she worshiped this young brother might understand that Maria Bevis was not too old to learn a lesson.

PROPOSED AMENDMENTS TO THE CONSTITUTION SUBMITTED TO THE CITIZENS OF THIS COMMONWEALTH FOR THEIR APPROVAL OR REJECTION, BY THE GENERAL ASSEMBLY OF THE COMMONWEALTH OF PENNSYLVANIA, AND PUBLISHED BY ORDER OF THE SECRETARY OF THE COMMONWEALTH, IN PURSUANCE OF ARTICLE XVIII OF THE CONSTITUTION.

A CONCURRENT RESOLUTION

Proposing an amendment to section three of article eight of the Constitution of Pennsylvania.

Section 1. Be it resolved by the House of Representatives of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania (if the Senate concur), That the following is proposed as an amendment to the Constitution of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania, in accordance with the provisions of the eighteenth article thereof:—

Section 2. Amend section three of article eight, which reads as follows: "All judges elected by the electors of the State at large may be elected at either a general or municipal election, as circumstances may require. All the elections for judges of the courts for the several judicial districts, and for the county, city, ward, borough, and township officers, for regular terms of service, shall be held on the municipal election day; namely, the Tuesday next following the first Monday of November in each odd-numbered year, but the General Assembly may by law fix a different day, two-thirds of all the members of each House consenting thereto: Provided, That such elections shall always be held in an odd-numbered year," so as to read:

Section 3. All judges elected by the electors of the State at large may be elected at either a general or municipal election, as circumstances may require. All elections for judges of the courts for the several judicial districts, and for county, city, ward, borough, and township officers, for regular terms of service, shall be held on the municipal election day; namely, the Tuesday next following the first Monday of November in each odd-numbered year, but the General Assembly may by law fix a different day, two-thirds of all the members of each House consenting thereto: Provided, That such elections shall be held in an odd-numbered year: Provided further, That all judges for the courts of the several judicial districts holding office at the present time, whose terms of office may end in an odd-numbered year, shall continue to hold their offices until the first Monday of January in the next succeeding even-numbered year.

A JOINT RESOLUTION

Proposing an amendment to section one of article nine of the Constitution of Pennsylvania, relating to taxation.

Section 1. Be it resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania in General Assembly met, That the following is proposed as an amendment to the Constitution of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania, in accordance with the provisions of the eighteenth article thereof:—

Section 2. Amend section one of article nine of the Constitution of Pennsylvania, which reads as follows:

"All taxes shall be uniform, upon the same class of subjects, within the territorial limits of the authority levying the tax, and shall be levied and collected under general laws; but the General Assembly may, by general laws, exempt from taxation public property used for public purposes, actual places of religious worship, places of burial not used or held for private or corporate profit, and institutions of purely public charity," so as to read as follows:

All taxes shall be uniform upon the same class of subjects, within the territorial limits of the authority levying the tax, and shall be levied and collected under general laws; and the subjects of taxation may be classified for the purpose of laying graded or progressive taxes; but the General Assembly may, by general laws, exempt from taxation public property used for public purposes, actual places of religious worship, places of burial not used or held for private or corporate profit, and institutions of purely public charity.

A JOINT RESOLUTION

Proposing an amendment to the Constitution of Pennsylvania.

Section 1. Be it resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania in General Assembly met, That the following is proposed as an amendment to the Constitution of Pennsylvania, in accordance with the provisions of the eighteenth article thereof:—

Article IX.

Section 15. No obligations which have been heretofore issued, or which may hereafter be issued, by any county or municipality, other than Philadelphia, to provide for the construction or acquisition of waterworks, subways, underground railways or street railways, or the appurtenances thereof, shall be considered as a debt of a municipality, within the meaning of section eight of article nine of the Constitution of Pennsylvania or of this amendment, if the net revenue derived from said property for a period of five years, either before or after the acquisition thereof, or, where the same is constructed by the county or municipality, after the completion thereof, shall have been sufficient to pay interest and sinking-fund charges during said period upon said obligations, or if the said obligations shall be secured by liens upon the respective properties, and shall impose no municipal liability. Where municipalities or counties shall issue obligations to provide for the construction of property, as herein provided, said municipalities or counties may also issue obligations to provide for the interest and sinking-fund charges accruing thereon until said properties shall have been completed and in operation for a period of one year; and said municipalities and counties shall not be required to levy a tax to pay said interest and sinking-fund charges, as required by section ten of article nine of the Constitution of Pennsylvania, until after said properties shall have been operated by said counties or municipalities during said period of one year. Any of the said municipalities or counties may incur indebtedness in excess of seven per centum, and not exceeding ten per centum, of the assessed valuation of the taxable property therein, if said increase of indebtedness shall have been assented to by three-fifths of the electors voting at a public election, in such manner as shall be provided by law.

A Clever Ruse.

When Thurlow was lord chancellor of England he was much at outs with the bishop of London. The latter was visited one day by a clergyman who sought appointment to a fat living then vacant. He wanted a letter of recommendation to Lord Thurlow, but the bishop said such a letter was likely to do more harm than good. Nevertheless he wrote it. When Thurlow read the missive he said, "Well, as that scoundrel, the bishop of London, has introduced you, you won't get the living." "So the bishop said, my lord," was the meek reply. "Did the bishop say so?" roared Thurlow. "Then I'll prove him a liar, for you shall have the living." And he was as good as his word.

Man Who Beheaded Charles I.

Perhaps the nearest British analogue for the puzzle about the "Man With the Iron Mask" is the identity of the masked executioner who beheaded Charles I. He was Richard Brandon, a ragman, who was also the common hangman. Brandon admitted that "they made him do it for £30," which by a grim jest was paid in half crowns. —New York Sun.

Exemplified.

Georgie—Auntie, what does irony mean? Auntie—It means to say one thing and mean the opposite, like calling a rainy day a fine day. Georgie—I think I understand you, auntie. Wouldn't this be irony: "Auntie, I don't want a nice big piece of cake?"

How to Freshen Wire Screens.

Select a day when there is a good brisk wind blowing, and, if a north wind, clean your south screens, a west wind your east screens. Get a good draft through your room and from the inside brush your screens briskly with any kind of a clean brush that will fit into the corners and you will be pleased to see clouds of dust wafted away with the strong draft. When well brushed take a clean cloth and wipe over the frames and wire and your screens will be as clean and fresh as when you just put them in.

How to Keep Doughnuts Fresh.

To keep doughnuts fresh and moist tear up pieces of paper (clean paper bags will do) and scatter them between the doughnuts and on the bottom and top. Leave them there while using the doughnuts. They absorb the grease and keep them fresh and nice. Use new papers for each batch.

New Idea Manure Spreader

Does More and Better Work

It thoroughly pulverizes all kinds of manure. Spreads more manure in less time than any other machine of like capacity. The manure is spread wider and more evenly.

Simple construction makes the New Idea the ideal spreader for busy farmers. Substantially made from the best material. Every part is inspected many times from start to finish. No complicated gears to get out of order. Has a steady, non-jerking feed and a perfect, endless conveyor that cannot slip.

Here Are a Few More Features of This 100-Point Spreader

Two cylinders (instead of one). Pointed cylinder teeth that never pull out. Cannot choke or clog. Unique and patented distributor spreads manure 5 to 7 feet wide. Low slown. Direct chain drive and simplest of all feeding mechanisms. Strong Wheels, lightest draft. Look at "New Idea" Spreaders the next time you are near our store.

The new marriage license law and the new party enrollment law should establish a common bond of sympathy between the registration assessors and the County Register. Both are required to step up to strangers and ask the most pointed kind of questions. Accident insurance agents have a new field for rich pickings.

Surveyor of the Port Kurtz appointed two Republicans as Customs House clerks—only he didn't. Ex-Surveyor of the Port Meek appointed the same two Republicans as Customs House clerks—only he didn't. The pot calls the kettle black and each says the other is a liar. Why all this flurry? Judging by the way things have been going for some time past the two clerks in question have no doubt branched out politically and formed a new party of their own.

Some western Pennsylvania candidates for County Judge are preparing to file petitions for nominations in party column as well as on the non-partisan ticket. The reason is that somebody has raised the question of the doubtful constitutionality of the new non-partisan law. It would seem that the Judges in question are fully conscious of how easy it has been in the past to make the constitution read pretty nearly any old way some particular court wanted it.

The fact that some eastern Pennsylvania iron mills are shutting down may and may not be due to the Wilson free trade bill, but the one thing certain is that some mills are shutting down.

But a short while ago William Sulzer was elected Governor of New York, and his election was hailed with joy by Democrats the country over and from President Wilson down to the humblest division worker. Since that time Sulzer has fallen out with Tammany and Tammany which supported him for election has accomplished his political ruin by means of impeachment proceedings at Albany. As the Democratic nominee for Governor Sulzer enthused the people with glowing descriptions of what he would do to destroy the vultures of Wall Street. Now it turns out that he was speculating in Wall Street while making these glowing promises, and more still speculating with money turned in to him as campaign subscriptions. It also appears that he swore falsely to the statement of campaign subscriptions received. Solong as Sulzer went along with Tammany his corrupt acts made no difference. Pennsylvania Democrats have become accustomed to criticising Republican Governors in this State. May we be pardoned in suggesting that they turn their thoughts toward New York.

WAITING STILL.

As we have noted on a number of occasions, the "Democratic Watchman" has charged Surveyor of the Port Kurtz with having carried boodle from Elk County to elect a certain Democrat to high office in Centre County in a campaign ten years ago. But the "Democratic Watchman" has never published the name of the Democratic candidate for whom this boodle was used. The "Watchman" knows but does not give his name. Why not?

DISCOVERED.

The "Centre Democrat" says that the editor of the "Democratic Watchman" is a secret ally of Senator Penrose. The "Democratic Watchman" says that the editor of the "Centre Democrat" is an ally of Senator Penrose. For several years we have been reading about a so-called bi-partisan machine in which Penrose is alleged to be a part. We never were quite sure what it was all about, but at last the mystery has been cleared up. Hereafter when we read about the bi-partisan machine conspiracy to corrupt Pennsylvania politics, defraud the voters and raise merry heck in general we will be able to form a mental picture of Surveyor of the Port Kurtz at one end Ex-Surveyor of the Port Meek at the other and the unhappy Penrose in the middle. Sound the alarmo!

"THE SAMPO."

THE dictograph is pretty,
The phonograph is fine,
The Edison kinetophone
Is probably divine,
But I will take a sampo,
I rather think, for mine.

You do not know the sampo?
Well, this is what it is:
There was a Finnish blacksmith—
The handiwork was his.
He loved a gentle lady.
I think her name was Liz.

Her mother practiced magic,
As many mothers do,
And the smith was a magician,
As are all lovers true.
He had a magic smithy
And a bellows that he blew.

The gentle lady's mamma
Was very, very poor.
One almost any day could see
The wolf before her door.
She had not anything ahead,
No rugs upon her floor.

But well she knew the lover
Could make a magic box,
The wheels of which would turn around
Exactly like a clock's,
And wealth would always pour from it
And barley fields and flocks.

A magic sampo, in a word—
He need but blow his fire,
To hammer on his iron hot,
To string his magic wire,
And, lo, the sampo would requite
Her every desire!

The smith was flabbergasted,
But he loved the daughter well,
And well he knew her mamma had
The lady there to sell.
And thus it was he made the box,
Which started with a bell.

Aladdin's lamp was bully—
I loved it, every line—
But I will take a sampo,
I rather think, for mine.
It has some extra features
I think are very fine.

—James Baldwin in Scribner's.

What He Had.

He was an artist, and the humdrum life in the butcher's shop vexed his noble spirit. Somehow selling scrag of mutton and the best end of the neck was not appreciated by his artistic temperament, and so he went to London, where talent is recognized and paid for sometimes.

For a time he wrote glowing letters home, describing his progress and success. Then there came silence.

"Success," reflected his sorrowing parents, "has been too much for him. He has forgotten us. Alas, alas!"

But he hadn't, for one evening, just as his father was sitting down to supper and preparing to enjoy his humble chop, a small boy brought a note.

"Dear dad," it read, "please meet me by the old bridge at midnight and bring with you a shirt, a waistcoat and a jacket. I have a hat."—London Mail.

Luke McLuke Says—

I have noticed that a man can always control his temper when the other fellow is bigger than he is.—Cincinnati Enquirer.

His Right of Locality.

"The Canadian actor who joined the company this season is bothering the managers to give him the chief role in their new polar play as his right."

"What right does he claim?"

"Says he is a north star."—Pele Mele.

This Might Be American.

What are known in these parts as "the beautifiers" were to arrive in the morning, says a correspondent in the Manchester Guardian. The house had already been got into a state of intense discomfort. The head of the household, after arguing heatedly with the landlord to induce him to do the house through, now bewailed inwardly his too complete success. However, it had to be faced, and the next question was, Would the painters come to time? At daylight the next morning there was a thunderous knocking at the door. The head of the house rejoiced, for he knew that now in a week his home would be habitable again. He heard the servant go down and open the door. A minute later there came a tap at the bedroom door.

"If you please, sir, it's the foreman painter."

"Well, he knows what to do. Tell him to start on any of the downstairs rooms."

"He's called to say, sir, that you can rely on him starting Monday next certain."

Begging the Question.

The Star—Honestly, what do you think of my acting in my new play? The Critic—Don't ask me. You're younger and so much stronger than I am.—Brooklyn Life.

The Pelican and Its Pouch.

Among the curiosities of nature must be reckoned the pouch of the pelican, which serves equally well as a net with which to scoop up fish and as a bag to convey food to its young. When not in use the bird can contract its pouch so that it is barely discernible, but when it is fully distended it will hold two gallons of water. When the pelican is hunting for food it flies slowly about twenty feet above the surface of the water, scanning its depths for any sign of its prey. As soon as a fish is seen there is a sudden folding of a pair of wings, a downward plunge with the speed of an arrow head first into the sea, the unerring marksman reappearing in a moment and floating on the waves long enough to reveal a glimpse of a fish gliding down its capacious gullet and to shake the water from its disheveled plumage.

Why Memoirs Are Tame.

A professor at a Harvard tea was asked why books of recollections were always so tame.

"Let me tell you a story," he answered. "A great man once said to a friend:

"'I think I'll write my recollections.'

"'Very good,' said the friend. 'But let me caution you not to recollect anything about celebrities that are living.'

"'Oh,' said the great man, 'living celebrities are just the ones I want to write about. They're the ones that will make my book sell.'

"'Very well,' said the other. 'But remember my warning.'

"'Why, what's the danger, anyway?'

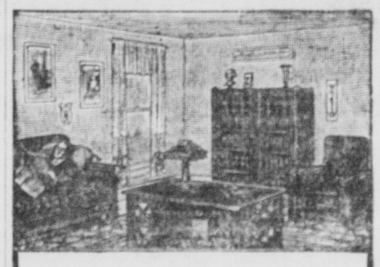
"'The danger,' replied the other, 'is that as soon as you begin to recollect things about living celebrities they will begin to recollect things about you.'"—New York Tribune.

An Interested Listener.

When Claude Grahame-White, the famous aviator, was in this country not long ago, he was spending a week end at a country home. The first night that he arrived a dinner party was given. Feeling very enthusiastic over the recent flights, he began to tell the young woman who was his partner at the table of some of the details of the aviation sport. It was not until the dessert was brought that he realized that he had been doing all the talking; indeed, the young woman had not uttered a single word. "I am afraid I have been boring you with this shop talk," he said, feeling as if he should apologize. "Oh, not at all," she murmured, in very polite tones; "but would you mind telling me, what is aviation?"

Excused.

The Judge—Unless you have a most satisfying excuse I shall have to fine you for contempt of court for failing to respond to the jury summons. The Taleswoman—I meant no disrespect, judge, but I hadn't a thing suitable to wear, and I couldn't find a ready made jury costume any place.—Woman's Cause.



Homes Furnished For 3 Cents a Day

A million homes have been furnished by us for as low as 3 cents per day.

The cost was at least one-third less than the same things cost in stores. The goods were sent on approval. The bills were paid a little each month—by saving a few cents daily.

A million men, on incomes of $10 to $16 per week, have thus furnished beautiful homes. And some of those homes are close by you.

New-Style Credit

Our credit plan is new, pleasant, convenient. It is simply an open account. No interest, no security, no red tape or publicity. No extra price.

We send goods on one month's approval. You have a month to decide before buying. The goods you keep are charged to your account. You pay as convenient—a little each month. On the average, our customers take a year to pay.

Save 30 to 50 Per Cent

We save you in addition from 30 to 50 per cent. That is proved by actual comparison made in 20 big cities between local store prices and ours.

This saving is due to our immense buying power, and to dealing with you direct.

30 Days' Trial

You can be sure of this saving, and of everything else, because our goods are all sent on approval. You can use them a month before deciding to buy. If you want to return them for any reason we pay the freight both ways.

The Wm. J. Dale family enjoyed a motor trip down Penns valley on Tuesday, visiting Penns cave. The trip was made in J. N. Everts' new machine.

The picnic held in the McFarlane grove at Boalsburg last Saturday was a delightful success. The Centre Hall and Boalsburg baseball teams crossed bats, the former getting walloped to the tune of 14 to 5.

A heavy wind and rain storm passed over this section on Sunday evening. Its fury was the worst at Linden Hall, where it uprooted century-old elms and oaks and broke the breast of the big dam causing a flood that swept down the valley and wrought considerable damage. Many fields were badly washed and crops injured.

Merchant L. D. Fye and wife and Mr. and Mrs. J. M. Corl were Sunday visitors at the G. R. Fry home at White Hall. Mr. Fye gave the party a joy ride in his new Ford through the valley in the evening, and as it was their first outing in the machine it was greatly enjoyed.

After a short visit among relatives in Philadelphia, Mrs. Paul Martz returned home on Saturday. She is not much taken with city life.

E. W. Hess is building an addition to his big barn, 36 x 40 feet.

Wm. H. Shultz Dead.

William H. Shultz, a gallant old Civil war soldier and highly respected citizen, died on Thursday morning of last week at his late home at Milesburg. His death was hastened by kidney trouble, complicated with other ailments. Funeral services were held from the late home on Saturday afternoon at 2 o'clock, interment being made at Curtin. Deceased was aged 73 years on April 4th, last. He was born at Curtin and years ago was employed in the iron mill at that place. During the Civil war he served with distinction as a member of Company H. Twelfth Regiment, Penna. Vols. He was twice married, his first wife being Sarah Ella Saylor. To this union there were born twelve children, six of whom survive. To his second wife six children were born, three of whom are living. These brothers and sisters also survive: Mrs. Nancy Jane Knisely, of Bellefonte; Mrs. Miles Dukeman, of Curtin; Mrs. Lide Reed, of Everett; Mrs. William Rine, of Lyonstown; Edward and Henry Shultz, both of Curtin.

Mrs. G. L. Clark Dead.

Following an illness from pneumonia, and apparently after having passed through the crisis of the disease, Mrs. George L. Clark died at 5 o'clock on Wednesday evening of last week at her late home in Johnsonburg. Her death was due to exhaustion of the heart. The body was removed to Avis, where interment was made from the home of Stephen S. Deise on Saturday afternoon at 1.30 o'clock. The deceased was a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. George T. Deise, at one ttme residents of Beech Creek. She was married to George L. Clark, a son of Mr. and Mrs. J. Irvin Clark, of Blanchard, removing with him to Louisiana, where they resided for some years and then removed to Johnsonburg. She was a devout Christian woman and an active, earnest member of the Presbyterian church. At the time of her death she was aged about 36 years. Surviving to mourn her passing away are a husband and four children, also her parents and one brother, Stephen, and these sisters, Miss Mecca, of Johnsonburg; Mrs. Oscar DeLong, of Avis, and Miss Jennie, of Johnsonburg.

Mrs. George W. Reynolds Dead.

Mrs. Anna E. Reynolds, wife of George W. Reynolds, of Altoona, died at 7:45 o'clock Tuesday, Aug. 5th, of tuberculosis at the Altoona hospital. She was born in Centre county on January 19, 1858, and resided in Altoona for the last six years. She was a member of the Presbyterian church. Besides her husband she is survived by one daughter, Mrs. Bessie Cuningham, of Altoona. One brother, H. C. Miller, of Altoona, and one sister, Mrs. Catherine Bathus, of Graysville, also survive. Services were held at the home at 7 o'clock Wednesday evening, the Rev. W. L. Whallon, the former pastor of the Broad Avenue Presbyterian church, officiating. The body was taken at 7:15 o'clock Thursday to Graysville, where interment was made.

James P. McKee Killed.

James McKee, quite well known in Bellefonte and for a number of years a passenger brakeman on the Bald Eagle valley branch, was instantly killed early Tuesday morning at the Pennsylvania railroad station at Tyrone. He had been to Altoona to visit friends the night before, returning to Tyrone on the train arriving there shortly before one o'clock. It is supposed that he was run down by a through train while crossing the tracks. He was well known among railroad men and was populaa with a large circle of friends.

George Hildebrand Dead.

George Hildebrand, a well known resident of Pleasant Hill, near Philipsburg, died at his home at that place about 6 o'clock Wednesday evening. He had only been bed-fast about one week. The deceased, in The New Department of Commerce and Labor at Harrisburg. would have completed his 80th year on October next.

Do You Want Two Pairs of Trousers For the Usual Cost of One Pair?

Well that's what you can get at our special sale which is now going on. We started out with 1400 pairs of Men's and Young Men's Trousers at one-third less than our regular prices. And as our regular prices are fully one-fourth less than the prices of other stores, this means a saving of one-half of what equally good trousers would cost anywhere else. Hence two pairs of trousers for the price of one. Of course you know that all clothing here costs less than elsewhere, because you buy directly from the wholesale jobbers. The profit you save makes the difference between our prices and other stores' prices.

AN IDEAL PERSONAGE

He Became Unpleasant on Acquaintance

By SAMUEL E. BRANT

I grew up under the influence of tales of western life. The desperado of the plains was to me a fascinating person, and the wickeder he was the more I admired him. It is a curious psychological fact that wickedness is attractive because it is wicked. I question if young persons who enter upon a life of crime do not often do so solely from this motive.

As I grew older I began to lay plans for getting out to the wild west, not to make a desperado of myself, but to gratify my curiosity as to what the life out there really was, and after finishing my education I concluded to go to one of the territories, look about me and, if I found a place to suit me, settle and grow up with the country. I selected Arizona, which has since furnished the scene of many novels and plays of western life.

I brought up in Coconino county at a small town from which I proposed to make an observation tour through the surrounding country. I found the region much as it has been depicted in theatricals, barring the stage effects. I got into a little play of my own, and it came very near being a tragedy.

I was riding through the country one day when I met a man on horseback, of whom I asked the way. He was a quiet looking, quiet spoken young fellow and cheerfully gave me the directions I asked for. We were about to part when I noticed him looking at me critically. He seemed to be taking note of my height, weight, the color of my hair and eyes and the shape of my face.

"You look like me," he said.

"Do I?"

"Except the clothes."

"I haven't got an Arizona outfit yet. If I stay here I'll probably adopt the costume of the country."

"I reckon we'll swap."

"Swap what?"

"Well, we'll trade hats first."

There was something in that cold gray eye of his as he spoke the last words that rendered any enforcement of them unnecessary. Though they were a command, he did not even put his hand to his pistol. He carried also a pair of revolvers in holsters slung across his saddlebow, either of which he could have grasped and used long before I could have got my own revolver out of its case, cocked it and brought it to bear upon him. I understood that I was to change hats with him and, taking off mine, handed it to him. Then I took off my coat and gave him that and such other articles of clothing as he demanded. Lastly, he called for my belt and pistol and gave me all his extensive armament in return. The exchange having been finished, he rode on.

Never in my life have I felt so contemptible. I had submitted to his will without resistance, and now I was riding away armed to the teeth, while he possessed one small pistol that I had brought from the east and considered a plaything in Arizona without making any attempt to regain my own. Was it my being unused to the ways of the region I was in, or the domination of a superior will, or a feeling that my man could kill me as quick with my tiny revolver as with all the various weapons he had transferred to me? I don't know myself, but I suspect I was deterred from putting up a fight by all these reasons.

I rode on as mild mannered a man as the one I had met, but with weapons innumerable. What the fellow wanted with my clothes, why he had given me his arms, was to me an insoluble mystery. But it didn't require a long time to find out. After awhile I met several men riding on the road together. They were chatting and paid no attention to me till I came very near them. Then one of them looked at me and started. We made the usual salute of strangers meeting in a new country, and I thought no more of the encounter. But I had not gone fifty feet before I heard a sharp command from behind:

"Hands up!"

I put my hands above my head and waited. The men who had passed me returned and relieved me of my armament.

"Dead easy, wasn't it?" said one of them to the others.

"You bet. I never thought he'd be taken without blood spilling."

"My friends," said I, "will you kindly inform me what all this means?"

"And will you kindly inform us what you mean by being thus taken unawares?"

"I wonder if you don't think I'm some one else."

"We don't think you're any one. We know you're 'Jimmy the Kid,' one of the most notorious desperadoes in Arizona, and we'll see that you don't do any more murders. What do you say, boys? Shall we string him up right here or take him in and let the sheriff do the job?"

I told them of the man I had met and how he had forced me to change clothes and arms with him. The story affected one of the three, but the other two laughed at it. Nevertheless since one of them doubted my identity the other two gave in and consented to turn me over to the sheriff.

Within an hour I was lodged in jail in a small town built on the bank of a stream. The sheriff told my captors that I—or, rather, the man I had been mistaken for—was full of tricks and was doubtless now engaged in playing one of them. He would call the vigilance committee together and have me tried and hanged as soon as it could be reached. Meanwhile he thought I'd be safe in the stone jail back of his house. If I tried to escape he would save the committee the trouble. I heard him say this. Indeed, he intended that I should.

He soon left the place, and I gave myself over to thoughts of no pleasant character. If I made no effort to get out and away when the committee arrived I had every chance of being hanged. And yet I was appalled by his threat, but not so much so as to prevent my looking about for a loophole.

The jail was an old stone smokehouse, with a door made of iron bars. It was getting dusk when I saw a girl somewhere between fifteen and seventeen years old come out of the back door of the jailer's house and take up an armful of firewood. I called to her. She dropped the wood and came to the door of the jail.

"What d'ye want?" she asked.

"Have you any feeling?" I asked. Instead of replying she stood looking at me, silent, and I went on. I told her my story as I have told it here and asked her if she could and would find a way to aid me to escape, assuring her that if she did not I would be surely hanged by mistake. I saw sympathy welling up in her eyes and had hope.

"I can't. Pop's gone to get the committee, and maw she's gone over to Aunt Sarah's. Pop he's got the key o' this door with him."

"How long will they be gone?"

"Maw she told me to git supper and have it ready at 8 o'clock. Reckon she and pop'll be home by then."

"Is there any one else in the house?"

"No."

There was a good hour in which to act. I asked the girl if there was a crowbar in the house. She didn't remember any such implement, but she thought one of the bars intended for the door of the jail was in the wood house. I asked her to get it for me. She started to do so, and it occurred to me that she would suffer by aiding me, and I called her back to ask her what they would do with her if they knew she had helped me to escape. She said she didn't know, but she wasn't afraid of her pop, though everybody else was. He wouldn't hurt her. Then she went on and brought me the bar.

I worked half an hour with it, prying and bending the bars of the gate near the lock, and at last succeeded in loosening the bolt from the catch. There was also a chain as an auxiliary, but with a thick bar six feet long I got a big leverage on it and broke it. Then I was free. The next question was what I should do to get away from the locality. Of course I would be followed.

"Got any horses here?" I asked the girl.

"Yes."

"A horse won't do. I would have to keep on open ground, where I would be seen and his hoofs would leave tracks."

"There's a boat. You might drop down the creek. Pop keeps a bloodhound in the barn to track folks with; he can't git the scent if you go by water."

"The very thing. No; that won't do either. The boat would be missed. But I'll take to the creek. How can I get out of here and do it without leaving tracks or scent?"

"I kin carry you."

I looked at her. She was of good size and seemed strong. "If you can you will probably save my life," I said.

She turned her back to me. I put my arms around her neck, lifted my feet from the ground, and, taking hold of my legs, she staggered with me to the creek, a distance of several hundred feet. There she set me down in the water.

"Goodby!" I said.

"Goodby!"

I drew her to me and kissed her.

"How would you like to go east to a school and grow up a lady?" I asked her.

Her face lighted up. "Can I go now with you?"

"No, but if I get out of this alive and the mistake is rectified I will write your father a proposition to do something for you to reward you for what you have done for me."

I held her hand and felt it turn in mine, indicating the emotion she felt, but did not put in words. I was some time in releasing it, then waded down the creek, turning before coming to a bend to look back and throw her a kiss. Her eyes were fixed on me when I disappeared.

I learned afterward that the jailer was completely baffled at the direction I had taken, since there was no indication of it whatever. I got back to where I was known, and my recent jailer was notified that he had held the wrong person. "Jimmy the Kid," as the real desperado was called, was never captured, but he was shot when not suspecting an enemy was near.

My brief experience in the west with my previously admired desperado served to satisfy me, and I left by the first train for the east. The girl who I am almost sure saved me from a hasty execution is now at school in New England. She has been there two years, and you should see the change in her from the wild thing she was when she brought me the bar that pried me out of jail to what she is today. My friends twit me, saying that I am educating a girl to make my wife, but I don't care for their innuendoes, for I am paying her for my very existence. I only wish there was more that I could do in the same direction, for the price seems infinitely small.

The Emigrants

A Story For Labor Day

By EVELYN C. GOODRICH

In what is called the Black forest in Germany lived a poor couple, Jacob Gaatz and his wife, who had but one child, a daughter, Gretchen, who was the main comfort of her parents. She and Hans Dreckel, the son of a blacksmith, were brought up together, each being the other's only companion, for the region in which they lived was sparsely settled, and no other family lived near them.

Jacob Gaatz was a woodcutter. When Gretchen was nineteen years old there came a great commotion in the family. Hans Dreckel one day met Gretchen on the road carrying a bundle of fagots and said to her:

"Gretchen, I have come to an important decision. I am young and strong and am not satisfied to remain here in the forest, where there is nothing for a man to do but cut wood. One can earn only money enough by so doing to keep body and soul together, for if we ask a better price our employers say to us: 'There are plenty of men who would like the work at the same price. If you are not satisfied we will employ others in your place.' I shall go where there are labor unions, and, since I hear that there are better prices paid in the United States of America, I shall go there."

Hans kept his eyes on Gretchen while he was speaking and saw hers gradually fall till they rested on the ground and were wet with tears. Till this moment Hans had never thought of Gretchen other than as a playmate and, after they were grown, as a friend. But now, when he saw the tears gather in her eyes because he was to leave her, a new sensation was born in his heart, a tenderness for the maiden with whom he had been reared, and, taking her in his arms, he kissed away her tears.

When Gretchen reached her home and threw the fagots beside the fireplace she sat down in a chair and covered her face with her hands. Her mother, who was washing the breakfast dishes, paused and said:

"What is the matter, Gretchen?"

It was a long while before the mother could draw from her daughter that Hans was going to that far country, America. But Gretchen did not tell her what was of far more importance to all of them—that he had asked her to go with him as his wife. It was hard for the poor girl to lose her companion and, since the announcement of his intended departure, her lover.

There would have been no cause for sorrow, but reason for rejoicing, if she could have yielded to his wish. This she could not do, for it would have been cruel for her to leave her old father and mother, who would now need her more and more every day. She only said that Hans was going to America, knowing that if her parents knew they were keeping her from going with him it would trouble them greatly.

When Hans found that Gretchen would not go with him he asked her to promise him that if her parents died she would come to him. But this was not much comfort to him, for on that condition his sweetheart was not likely to join him for many years. And, as for Gretchen, it meant that she must lose her parents in order to join her lover.

The day Hans departed he said to Gretchen: "You know that my father is old and cannot live long and my mother is not my own mother, but my stepmother. Father will never come to me in America, and when he dies mother will go to live with one of her own children. But there will be nothing to prevent your bringing your parents with you to my new home. They say money is made very easily there. A skilled laborer gets 12 marks a day. Out of that I can save 6 marks a day at least and can send this money to you so that you may all join me in"—

"Oh, Hans," exclaimed the girl, "you are so good, so hopeful, but you must learn to do something that will enable you to earn so much money, and in those countries where high wages are paid they say it costs more to live. But," she added, "I will come to you if I can ever do so without bringing sorrow to my dear father and mother."

Hans kissed her again and again, then strode away without once looking back, lest he should show the moisture in his eyes, which he considered unmanly.

* * * * * * *

Eight years passed, during which the lovers remained true to each other. In all this time there was never an interval of more than a month that Hans did not write to his sweetheart, and she always replied to his letter with her whole heart. Hans prospered and offered to send her money to bring over her parents, but she never even mentioned the matter to them. Nor did they know that they were keeping apart two young persons who but for them might be happy together and rearing a family of children. In all these eight years Gretchen never breathed a word to her parents of the sacrifice she was making for them.

One day when Jacob was cutting wood a fierce storm came up and blew a huge limb from a tree, burying him under it. He lived but a few days, when his wife and daughter found themselves without even the support of an aged woodcutter. Gretchen at once wrote to Hans announcing her father's death and in a few weeks received a reply. Folded in the letter was a paper which ordered a bank to pay her 300 marks. Hans told her to use it as she liked, either for support of herself and her mother or to bring her mother to him in America, where he and Gretchen might be married and her mother could live with them.

Gretchen, who was a prudent girl, with great self control, thought over Hans' proposition for several days before coming to a decision. When she had made up her mind as to the only course to pursue that would be justice to Hans she confessed to her mother that when he had gone to America he had asked her to be his wife and she had refused to leave her parents.

"I am too old to go so far, Gretchen," said the old woman, "but I will not longer be a burden to you. Go to Hans. I will remain here."

It was a long time before Gretchen could persuade her that such a course was impracticable and that her mother could only repay the sacrifice that she and Hans had made by giving her consent to go to America. Hans had learned the mason's trade and was getting 12 marks a day for his work. But recently he had set up as master mason and employed men to work for him.

When the old mother became convinced that it was her duty to make the trip she consented, and the two sailed for America in the steerage of an ocean liner. They arrived at the port of New York in due time and expected to find Hans there to meet them. In this they were disappointed, but he had been there and had made arrangements for them to be admitted into the country by the emigrant authorities, pledging himself to take care of them, so that they should not be a burden on the people. He also left instructions for them to come to him in a neighboring city, with tickets on the railroad to take them there.

When Gretchen and her mother reached their final destination they learned the reason of his not having met them on the arrival of the steamer. A strike had been declared by a certain trade union, and other trades had been gradually drawn into the struggle between capital and labor, including the masons. Hans had great influence with the men of his trade and was exerting himself to persuade them to keep the peace, assuring them that by doing so they would certainly win every just demand.

On arriving at the city where Hans lived they carried all their bundles except one box, which, being too heavy for them, they left to be brought later to the address that had been given them. Hans had expected them to hire a conveyance, but the frugal life they had led had not prepared them for such extravagance. So they walked, Gretchen inquiring the way, and passed through a street that was filled with workmen. On a wagon a man was standing speaking to a crowd of laborers who had gathered about him. They stopped to listen to him, but could not understand him since he spoke in the English language. But they could see by the upturned, intent faces that he was producing a profound effect upon them.

"Let us go on," said the mother. But Gretchen seemed disposed to listen to the man, though she did not know what he was saying. In vain her mother tugged at her to get her to go on, but in spite of the urging she remained. It was only when the man ceased to speak and, getting down from the wagon, was lost in the crowd that Gretchen consented to pursue their way.

When they reached the house where Hans lived they found a suit of rooms on the second floor comfortably fitted up. They were received by a woman whom Hans had deputed for the purpose, who told them that Hans was very busy and they must make themselves at home till he came.

After awhile they heard a cheering in the street which seemed to be approaching the house and growing as it came nearer. Then there were shouts of "We've won! We've won!" The crowd stopped before the house where the two emigrants were, and a man stood on the steps for a few minutes, cheered by the crowd. Then he hurried up the stairs and burst into the room. He and Gretchen flew to each other's arms.

"Himmel!" cried the old woman. "It is the man on the wagon!"

Gretchen had recognized Hans the moment she laid eyes on him, though he was but little more than a youth when they parted and he was now a man and very much changed. Their meeting was a happy one in many respects. In the first place, the winning of the strike was a great advantage to Hans, who had feared enforced idleness, whereas now that it was settled he could proceed with work he had contracted for. Gretchen and her mother had completed a journey both dreaded, and their future comfort was assured.

There was no reason for haste or delay in the wedding, so Gretchen was called on to fix the day, and, inasmuch as she had no trousseau to prepare, she chose an early date, since Hans desired that they should all get settled down to their new life and he give his mind to his work. The bride and her mother had no friends in their newly adopted country, but the groom had a-plenty. A number of bridal presents from them came in, some of them from well to do persons for whom Hans had constructed buildings, and they were quite valuable.

Hans is prospering and is considered one of the most reliable men in labor matters, he being always consulted before any important action is taken.

Better Than Gold.

Gold is generally looked on as the last word in costliness, but, as a matter of fact, there are more metals dearer than gold than there are cheaper. The number of known metals is above seventy. Iridium, for instance, is three times as expensive as gold. Osmium is another metal much dearer than gold. It is by far the heaviest of all known substances, being more than twenty-two times as heavy as water. This metal has the peculiar property of being able to stand without melting the most intense heat known. Palladium, which is twice as costly as gold, is just the reverse. It is quite easy to make palladium vanish in steam. Being of a white, silvery color and untarnishable, it is used for the division marks on scales and delicate scientific instruments.—London Answers.

When the British Retreated.

One of the speakers before the banquet of the Massachusetts society of the Sons of the American Revolution told of an experiment which he made several years ago. He first consulted historical records and ascertained the exact time of day that the British left for Lexington. He then started to go over the same ground. From a fast walk he soon found it necessary to break into a run and then a sprint. Then he found himself getting so far behind time that he had to take a trolley car. He left Lexington at the time of day that the British left, and, although they are said to have reached Charlestown at 7 o'clock in the evening, he did not get there until after 7:30, thus proving that the British beat the time of the modern trolley cars.—Boston Traveler.

The Parrot's Threat.

Among the countless presents sent to Victoria by her subjects early in her reign was a parrot from a bird fancier at Bristol. "Poll was too shy on her arrival at court to speak, but when Victoria, struck with the beautiful plumage and fine symmetry of the newly arrived guest, entered, with great condescension, into conversation with her, Poll's shyness wore off, and she suddenly screamed, 'If you don't send £20 I'll go back.' The queen sent the £20—'an inducement to all teachers to impart profitable instruction to their pupils.'"—"Married Life of Queen Victoria."

Dr. Holmes and the Fork.

"Are you hungry, little girl?" said Dr. Wendell Holmes to one whom he saw looking with longing eyes at the good things before her.

"Yes, sir," was the reply.

"Then why don't you take a sandwich?"

"Because I haven't any fork."

"Fingers were made before forks," said the doctor, smiling.

The little girl looked, then said, "Not my fingers."—St. Louis Post-Dispatch.

A Valentine

That Was a Long Time Coming

By EDNA WINTHROP

In 1849 Edward Poindexter left his home in the east and his ladylove, Ellen Crane, to join the gold hunters in California. She received several letters from him, the last at the beginning of the new year, the midyear of the nineteenth century. In this letter Poindexter said: "I shall send you a valentine, calculating to mail it so that it shall reach you on the 14th of February. The mails are the surest means of transportation from here to the east, but even they are not very regular. If you don't receive my valentine, say, within ten days after St. Valentine's day, go to the postoffice and inquire for it, writing me at the same time."

The 14th of February came, but no valentine. Instead, a letter came from a friend of Poindexter stating that Poindexter had been taken ill a fortnight before and had died. He had struck a vein of ore, which he had instructed the writer to sell and send her the proceeds.

The mine was afterward sold for $20,000 and the money sent to Miss Crane. She never married, but a brother having died, leaving a little girl named for her, Aunt Ellen brought her up. The aunt died when little Ellen was twenty years old. Ellen Crane, Jr., inherited the $20,000 her aunt had received from her lover in California. The niece was engaged to be married to Walter Browning, a young man occupying the position of teller in a bank, and expected soon to be a bride.

One evening shortly before St. Valentine's day Walter Browning, who was expected by his fiancee, came to see her with every evidence of distress. A thousand dollar banknote had slipped through his fingers and disappeared. He had handled a package of notes of the denomination of $1,000 each and was satisfied that there were ten of them. They had been deposited as such an amount during the day, but when he came to count them later there were only nine of them.

The misfortune weighed heavily upon the lovers, who were at the time expecting to be married in a few days. Indeed, Browning assigned the error he had made to this very cause. One about to be married is not likely to have all his wits about him, and he realized that he was not, in his condition, fitted for the very important work he was doing. Ellen asked him if he could remember any interruption that had occurred while receiving the money. He thought hard for a few minutes, then said that after making the entry in the depositor's passbook, while the bills were on the counter, the cashier had called to him to ask him a question. Browning had turned his back to the money while he held a brief conversation with the cashier, but had not left his cage.

Browning had no trouble in convincing his sweetheart that he was not playing a game to cover up a defalcation. But the bank manager was of a suspicious disposition, and since he could see no way for a thousand dollar bill to disappear within a cage with one man in it, except by means of that man's fingers, he suspected Ned. As soon as the teller had left the bank an investigation was made. The depositor was telephoned to know what amount he had intended to deposit. He replied that he had handed in ten $1,000 bills. This eliminated that loophole for Browning, and it was the only possible escape for him. The officers of the bank met later in the evening and decided what to do in the matter so far as Browning was concerned. They knew that he was to be married in a few days. Browning's fellow clerks had bought a wedding present for the bride, and it had been the intention of the president to send a check for $100. Owing to these conditions they decided not to arrest Browning.

When Browning went to the bank the next morning every person there looked up at him. He felt that he was a suspect and knew that he was indebted to the bank for $1,000, which he could not pay. Ellen would have paid the money in his stead, but in the first place the fortune she had received from her aunt had been left to her in trust for her children, the income only to be paid to her, and in the second place the payment of the last amount would not remove the cloud resting upon her lover.

Browning went into his cage and began to receive deposits, but his mind was so preoccupied by his trouble that he soon went to the manager and told him that, considering his condition of mind, he feared he was not to be trusted at the window; that a substitute had better be put on duty and he be placed temporarily at other work. His admonition was heeded and his request granted.

The wedding was to take place on the 15th of February. On the evening of the 13th Browning and his betrothed talked over the matter of withdrawing the invitations and being married privately, but had come to no conclusion. Browning took his trouble so much to heart that he dreaded the ordeal of facing friends on what was intended for a joyful occasion, feeling that he was suspected of betrayal of a trust, of larceny, and in danger of arrest. On the other hand, no one except themselves and those connected with the bank was aware of his trouble, and it would only make the matter worse if it were known. To recall the invitations would make talk, which would be sure to bring out the cause of their being withdrawn. They parted to meet the next morning, when they would come to a decision.

On St. Valentine's day Walter Browning and Ellen Crane were trying to make up their minds as to what course to pursue. Walter begged for a private wedding. Though there was no reason for such a dread, he fancied he might be arrested during the ceremony. Ellen strove in vain to eradicate this fear. She was arguing with him when a shrill whistle was heard without, followed by a sharp ring at the doorbell.

"It's the postman," she exclaimed, "and since he's loaded down with valentines he's in a hurry. I'll go to the door and take in the mail."

She returned walking very slowly and looking intently at an unopened envelope.

"Who has been sending me this, I wonder?" she said, speaking more to herself than to her lover. "It seems to be a valentine. At least there are some flowers stamped on it. I don't know the handwriting, and I don't know any one at the place where it was postmarked."

"It seems to me," said Walter drearily, "that the quickest way to find out about a letter is to open and read it. But that's something no woman would think of doing."

"If the postmark was plainer," continued Ellen, without heeding his sarcasm, "I might make it out. It's San—something or other, and Col. That must be Colorado."

"Break it open!" cried Walter testily. "You'll drive me crazy."

She soothed him with a kiss, then tore open the envelope, remarking at the same time that it was dirty enough to have gone around the world. It contained a cheap looking valentine, and within the valentine was folded several thicknesses of newspaper. Ellen unfolded the newspaper and took out two $500 bills.

"For heaven's sake!" she exclaimed.

Walter simply gaped at the bills.

"What does it mean?" was Ellen's next comment.

By this time her lover's curiosity was excited. With a trembling hand he took the valentine and the bills from her.

"Why, these are old state bank bills," he said, wonderingly. Then, taking the envelope, he scrutinized it. "This valentine was mailed in 1850," he went on, "and those letters are not Col; they are Cal. It's from San Francisco, Cal."

Many a time Ellen Crane had heard her aunt tell about the valenine her lover was to send her, about which she was to make inquiry if it did not come and which it was supposed he had been cut off from sending by sickness and death. A flood of light burst in upon her. This was that valentine. It had been sent, but had been many years on the way. The happy girl did not wait to explain this to her lover. Holding the bills high up above her head, she danced around the room, crying:

"Now we can restore the missing money."

Later Browning went to the postoffice with the valentine and learned from the postmaster that a postoffice building had recently been pulled down on the line the valentine had traveled, and the letter had been found on the removal of a fixture behind which it had slipped, doubtless while being sorted. It was forwarded and fell into the hands not of the Ellen Crane to whom it had been written, but to her namesake and heir, who lived in the house to which it had been addressed.

Ellen placed the bills in Browning's hands. Going to a money broker, he learned that though the banks that had issued the bills had gone out of existence a fund had been put aside for payment of all demands against it. Then Walter went to the bank that had issued the bill he had lost and exchanged his money for one of its $1,000 notes and with it made up the deficiency for which he was responsible.

The act removed all suspicion, and there was a happy wedding, made happier by the great load taken off the shoulders of the contracting parties.

The $1,000 was in time returned by the bank. One of the employees of the institution proved dishonest, and a long series of peculations was discovered. He confessed the stealing of the bill that Browning had lost. On that occasion he was acting as paying teller in the next cage to Browning. When the latter's back was turned, seeing that no one was looking in his direction, he took out from a pocket in his coat a slender piece of whalebone with a hook on the end of it and, passing it through an opening in the grating that separated the cages, removed one of the bills lying on the counter.

This occurred shortly after Browning's marriage and caused so great a reversal in the feeling toward Browning that the officers of the bank thought they should make some reparation to him for his misfortune. Besides returning the $1,000 that he had made good, they created the office of assistant cashier and gave him the position with a large increase of salary.

So his misfortune turned out to be a blessing in disguise. And it served him in more respects than one. It made him a far more careful man and extremely cautious in condemning others under suspicion. He eventually became the president of a bank, and whenever a shortage occurred he invariably protected the one suspected from being unjustly condemned. For this alone he was much beloved by the employees.

Woman's World

Mrs. Sulzer Silent Partner of New York's Governor.

© 1913, by American Press Association.

MRS. WILLIAM SULZER.

When asked just before she went to Albany to preside at the gubernatorial mansion what she was going to do as first lady of the state of New York Mrs. Sulzer instantly replied: "Just what I am doing now—trying to make a good home for Will. We will live the simple life in our new position just as we have in the past, and if friends come in when we have pork and beans for dinner they must enjoy the pork and beans or go elsewhere. There will be no $5,000 dinners given in our home at Albany. Our home will be a real home. There will be no frills about it. Mr. Sulzer and I have no social aspirations."

There is a pretty romance connected with the Sulzer marriage. Mr. Sulzer first met the lady of his choice in Washington at a dinner in 1904. That he was peculiarly impressed for a confirmed bachelor was remarked at the time. Then he went west and did not see the then Miss Rodelheim for four years. When he came back and met her he calmly said:

"Don't you think it is time we were getting married? You know we have been engaged for four years."

She did not know it. But what woman could let a chance like that go by the board? For the Sulzer method of winning a girl was as convincing as his method of getting a vote.

In appearance Mrs. Sulzer is rather above medium height, graceful and with an urbanity that detracts nothing from the impression of force one gets from conversation with her. Her voice is well modulated and her diction remarkably clear. Mrs. Sulzer before her marriage was a trained nurse, which probably accounts for the soft, low voice—that most excellent thing in one of the nursing profession.

Mrs. Sulzer is the type of woman best fitted for the helpmeet of a man of strong ambitions like the Democratic governor. She is difficult to interview, for she insists upon keeping her own personality in the background. When her husband's name is mentioned her face at once lights up with interest and pride, but try to get her to speak of herself and she becomes at once as mum as the proverbial clam.

Improving Comic Supplement.

The distinction of having first taken up the work for the improvement of the comic supplement is claimed by the League of American Pen Women, of which Mrs. Josiah Quincy Kern of Washington is president. She is also chairman of the comic supplement committee for the Federated Clubs of the District of Columbia and is a member of the board of education of Washington. She wrote and circulated thousands of copies of the resolutions adopted by the League of American Pen Women and hundreds of other clubs and societies which declare "that the so called colored supplement is a menace to the culture and morals of children, begetting in them an admiration for deceit and cunning, misrepresentation and vulgarity, disrespect for the aged and infirm, a lack of reverence for sacred things and of sympathy for the unfortunate, encouraging bad manners, disregard for authority, incorrect language, low ideals of literature, distorted notions of art, the perpetuation of practical jokes, unpatriotic sentiments and general demoralization of character."

The Medici Collar.

Medici collars are the last cry in neckwear. You may make them of any sort of lace provided that the mesh is heavy enough to support a milliner's wire under its outer edge, or you may evolve them from chiffon, tulle or gauze ribbon provided that the material is closely plaited or fluted and made to stand far out from the throat at back and sides. In front the medici tapers into rather sharp points that join several inches below the throat or that run to either side of a V'd or squared neck. It isn't a street collar for winter, but it is a picturesque accessory for an afternoon house frock and attached to a plastron of malines or lace lends chic to the plainest of blouses.

E. J. Burd, of Coburn, was a genial caller at "The Republican" office on Monday. Mr. Burd never fails to get around a few days ahead of the time to keep the date on the label on his paper marked up a year ahead.

The Harrisburg "Telegraph" pays this compliment to W. I. Fleming, of Bellefonte, appointed last week to a place under Prof. J. Price-Jackson in the new Department of Commerce and Labor: Wilson I. Fleming is especially qualified for the work of the important Bureau of Statics. For years he has been handling the intricate and voluminous election papers in the State Department. The accuracy of the ballots in all the election districts of the State has depended on the correctness of his work, and in all the years there has not been a mistake in the disposition of the papers of hundreds of thousands of candidates. Mr. Fleming is prominent in Masonic work, especially in the Knights Templar, and he is one of the most popular men on Capitol Hill.

Willard Hall, the registration assessor, has been having his troubles this week. The new party enrollment law requires that the assessor shall note on his registry list the party affiliation of each registered voter. Most voters have no hesitancy in declaring their party preference, but occasionally one is encountered who considers it nobody's business. Of course, the assessor is helpless when he encounters a voter who is unwilling to declare himself and can do nothing but note the fact that the required declaration was asked for and refused. Provisions of the enrollment law say a voter who refused to declare his party affiliation cannot receive a ballot at the primary election other than the ballot for non-partisan candidates.

Resolutions of Sympathy.

The Port Matilda Baptist church and Sunday school recently adopted the following resolutions:

"Whereas, in His wise providence our Heavenly Father has called from time to eternity the soul of our sister Mary Margaret Young, the beloved mother of George, Chester and John Young; therefore be it,

"Resolved, that we express to the bereaved family our sincere sympathy in the sad affliction that has befallen them, and assure them that in the loss they have suffered we, too, share;

"Resolved, that we commend them to the blessed Savior for whose glorious appearing together with his redeemed children we hopefully look;

"Resolved, that a copy of the resolution be sent to the bereaved family and that they be filed with the records of our church, and that a copy be sent to the county papers.

"A. S. WILLIAMS, Committee."
